INTRODUCTION

These newspaper items were compiled from issues held by the Maryland Historical Society and the Library of Congress, in addition to microfilm rolls of the Maryland Historical Society and the George Peabody Library.

Noting the dearth of marriage and death notices in earlier issues, I find that this collection is abundant with announcements of marriages and obituaries, not only for prominent persons but for those of lesser prominence as well. In addition I have included those advertisements of Equity (or Chancery) cases in which heirs are listed. It seems that only those Equity cases were listed in the local papers in which at lease one of the heirs was residing outside the state. These cases provide excellent leads in tracing persons back to Maryland.

The first newspaper in Allegany County for which I have found any issues was the Maryland Advocate. It began in 1823. In 1828 another newspaper was founded in Cumberland - The Weekly Civilian.

Hagerstown began publishing newspapers in 1797 with the Maryland Herald. During the period of this book, 1820-1830, there were two newspapers, the Maryland Herald, with changes in its name occurring during the period, and the Torchlight, called at this point The Torchlight and Public Advertiser. The Torchlight may have been established in Hagerstown as early as 1814. Eventually the two papers merged. The Hagerstown Mail was founded in 1828.

Williams-Port introduced its first newspaper, Republican Banner, on January 2nd 1830.

At the beginning of each issue is a trigraph indicating the name and location of the newspaper.

He was a native of France, and born 28 July 1742. He came to America during the war between France and Britain. He married Catharine Deemer in 1766 in York co and shortly after removed to Hagers-town. In that year he first visited the Western country, as far as Pittsburgh, then composed of a few Indian huts. He brought a number of cattle with him which he exchanged to General St. Clair for a tract of land in Ligonier Valley. He still left his family at Hagers-town, and in 1767 brought the first wheat over the mountans ever imported into the Western Country. He cultivated it, together with other grain on his farm in the Valley, and prepared for his family, whom he removed there in the following fall. He took out a warrant for all that tract of land on the Connemaugh river, on which the salt is now made, and was the first to discover those immense springs of salt water. In 1771 he returned with his family to Hagers-town, being unable to live any longer amongst the Indians. In 1793 he removed to Greensburgh, from Hagers-town, where he remained until the time of his death. Some time after his removal there, he was appointed a Justice of the Peace by Governor M'Kean.
